Even though he's only six years older than me, he's very much a man, so different from the boys I've dated over the past few years. Just the way he calls me 'ma belle' is enough to make me melt. But he treats me like his kid sister, which irritates the hell out of me. Then Alex asks Damon if he'll pick me up from university in Wellington and drive me home to Christchurch for the Easter break. We have eight hours together with nothing to do but talk. He's smart, bossy, arrogant, and so frickin' sexy I could explode. By the time we're halfway home, I want him more than the air I breathe. For the remainder of the journey, I flirt with him. Tease him. And then when we get home, I tell him I want him. He pins me up against the wall. Informs me he would never sleep with his best mate's little sis. He says he's not sweet, and he's not gentle. And he insists a good girl like me should steer clear of bad boys like him. OMG. Now I want him more than life itself. So I invite all my friends around and ask them to tell me their best tips for seducing a man. We whittle it down to a list of six they insist will definitely work.
